Due to her introverted and self-doubting nature, she faced many setbacks and eventually returned to the small village in Altay to live together with her mother, Zhang Fengxia. However, upon her return, she found that her mother's small shop was struggling financially, and their house was on the verge of collapsing. With no other choice, Wenxiu had to take on the responsibility of supporting her family and began managing the shop's finances. The village was home to Kazakh nomadic herders, who maintained the oldest way of life as a nomadic tribe. Cultural differences made it difficult for Wenxiu to collect debts, but she made new friends, including a young horse herder named Batai. Although the final account was not recovered, the vast sky of northern Xinjiang seemed to offer her a glimpse of a different life. Thus, she decided to follow the villagers to open a tent shop on the pasture, seeking both livelihood and direction in life. The Kazakh people, who live under the Altai Mountains in northwest China, are probably the last nomadic tribe in the world. Under the test of life and death, Wenxiu finally knew the jar that her mother always held contained her father's ashes. After praying, her mother finally came to terms with her father's death, buried him in a spring, and decided to live her life to the fullest, no longer wasting her life. Life on the summer pasture was a cycle of work and rest. Although Wenxiu and her mother's tent shop struggled, they could always enjoy themselves in adversity. Wen Xiu, also encouraged by Batai, regained her writing dream. A hazy love gradually developed between the two young people, but was blocked by a series of misunderstandings. Coincidentally, Wen Xiu's former colleague of Han nationality Gao Xiaoliang entered the pastoral area to seek business opportunities. By chance, Li Wenxiu and her mother discovered that wild agaric in the forest could be sold to the city. Meanwhile, Gao Xiaoliang has also established a relationship with Zhang Fengxia. However, the village chief came to Zhang Fengxia and suspected that Gao Xiaoliang was destroying the grassland in order to dig Xinjiang caterpillar fungus. Zhang Fengxia and Li Wenxiu went to question Gao Xiaoliang, then had a dispute with Gao Xiaoliang. Batai shot his beloved horse in order to save Wenxiu. Batai was heartbroken and eventually cut off the head of horse before leaving. Disappointed Wen Xiu got a paperwork job at a water plant because her article submission was recognized, and she left the ranch on the pretext. However, during her time working at the Waterworks, Wenxiu was no longer accustomed to modern life, and she found that her life in Altay had been deeply imprinted in her heart. Few years later, Wen Xiu, who had already published her first book, returned to the village to visit her mother and grandmother.
